Keywords: mode, modality, medium, intermodal relations, allusive intermodality.

The aim of the present paper is to define the phenomenon of allusive intermodality resorting to the tools of multimodality as this interphenomenon can be viewed as "a triangulation focus and a lense or prism for studying other (inter)phenomena" (Воробйова, 2021, p. 25). The top-priority terms to be outlined are 'mode', 'modality' and 'media'.

The term 'mode' is sometimes used interchangeably with phrases 'form of representation' and 'mode of representation' (Lehtonen, 2001, pp. 72, 77). The term 'modus' is sometimes used instead with the definition 'a set of certain means which belong to one system; these means are able to convey the meaning' (Макарук, 2019, pp. 14, 39). In some papers the term 'mode' is equaled to the terms 'plan of communication', 'sensorial and perceptual resource', 'code' and 'sign system' (Андрєєва, 2016, p. 4), which we consider to be a disputable issue. In the paradigm of multimodality layout of text, typography and materiality of the book are defined as separate modes (Nørgaard, 2014, pp. 475-478). Occasionally, the terms 'mode' and 'medium' are treated as synonyms (Toolan, 2014, p. 457).

We understand 'medium' as a material or substance that bears a sign that contains information (like a printed book, a storage device with a file etc.) (Kress & Van Leeuwen, 2001; Lyons, 2016). In defining the notion of a 'mode' we follow the multimodality scholars Kress and van Leeuwen: a 'mode' is an organised set of semiotic resources for making meaning in a culture.

As for the correlation between the terms 'mode' and 'modality', we suggest that modalities are limited by the structure of the brain and the sensory system, while the range of modes is theoretically unlimited (Oja, 2023, p. 630).

We agree that an intermodal relation is present when one mode has an influence on the key properties of another mode in a specific text (Siefkes, 2015, p. 115). However, we believe that intermodality is the term which defines the relations between the modes belonging to different texts and modalities.

Therefore, basing on our definition of an allusion (Воробйова, 2011, p. 67), we conclude that allusive intermodality is the relation between the two texts constructed by the modes of different modalities when one of these texts indirectly refers its recipients to the other.
